

CONSUMER ADVISORY

A consumer advisory is required if animal foods are served raw or undercooked.

Example Foods

- Eggs: Poached, over-easy, sunny-side up, or soft-boiled egg dishes; mayonnaise, aioli, or other dressings made with raw eggs. If pasteurized eggs are used, a consumer advisory is not required.
- Meats: Undercooked hamburgers, steak, or other meats (i.e. served rare or medium rare); raw meats like steak tartare.
- Seafood: Sushi/sashimi; ceviche; undercooked tuna or salmon steaks.
- Shellfish: Oysters, clams, or mussels served raw.

There are two parts to the advisory: the disclosure mark and the reminder statement.

1 Disclosure mark

Mark each food offered raw or undercooked with a disclosure asterisk (*), or another unique mark. If the raw animal food is “hidden,” point it out in the food description.

2 Reminder statement

- Use the same statement shown in the example menu to the right.
- Place the reminder statement at the bottom of the menu page using the same symbol (*) that marks the menu items offered raw or undercooked.
- If the food is on a buffet line or menu boards are used, the reminder statement must be posted somewhere in view of the customer.
